RECYCLING

EU Conundrum

There was no respite for the recycling industry players this week following Posidonia, as several from the industry headed for the EU Ship Recycling conference in Rotterdam, where surprisingly there was no presence from the EU! This severely questions their intent to ever approve India as an EU ship recycling destination and worryingly poses more questions for the future, when inevitably the market will be over supplied, including European flagged units. This is despite the tremendous efforts made by the Indian recycling yards to improve their standards yearly, which now sadly appears to once again fall on deaf ears by the European commission.

We have also started to see more VLCC's coming into the market this week, which is unsurprising considering the poor freight market for V's where fixtures seen at minus $per day and obviously below Opex, causing Owners to make great losses. It is expected and needed that we will see more units come into the market and finally provide some supply to what has been a starved recycling market this year in 2022.

Pricing has stabilised this week following the recent correction from the local currency depreciations witnessed across the Indian sub-continent and it is hoped this week's sales can provide a benchmark for the market and give Owners the confidence to know what the realistic recycling value is of their vessels.
